Fleet Poised Off Falklands; Britain Withdraws Peace Plan

LONDON — British amphibi-ous forces in the South Atlantic were mustered Thursday to attack the Falkland Islands after Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher pre-pared Parliament and the British people for possible war.

A senior government source said the task force had been given the go-ahead to attack, but they are likely to launch a series of hit-andrun raids rather than storm the beaches. The comple are charged with defrauding six Kore-an companies in which they allegedly netted $210 million in questionable loans and commercial paper transactions.

The scandal deepened Tuesday with arrest of Lee Kyu Kwan, an uncle of Mr. Chun's wife, on charges of accepting $142,000 in bribes from Miss Chang to exert his influence in arranging government approval for a joint banking venture with Saudi Arabian interests being promoted by Miss Chang's husband.

Mr. Lee, who is also Miss Chang's brother-in-law, resigned as president of the government's Korean mining promotion corporation last weekend. In a final report made public Thursday evening, government prosecutors ac-knowledged that Mr. Lee was indi-rectly linked to the loan scandal but said that he had no direct role in arranging illegal loans from two government-run banks to financially troubled Korean industrial firms that also had borrowed mon-

Thatcher Says U.K. Will Stay in EEC

But She Vows to Continue Fighting To Reverse Decision on Farm Prices

From Agency Dispatches LONDON - Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher said Thursday that Britain intended to remain full member of the European Economic Community despite the decision by its community partners to override London's veto of farm DTICE INCTERSES.

She told Parliament that it was unprecedented for a veto to be ignoted and said her governme would seek to reverse what she saw as a move toward rule by majority vote in the Common Market. The move on farm prices was very serious "and could be even more serious if majority voting were applied to other aspects of community work," Mrs. Thatcher She continued: "We are full

The compromise is an EEC convention used by Britain to veto the price increases on the ground that the matter was of vital national in-

But other members argued that the 10.5-percent increase in farm prices that Britain tried to veto was not of vital importance to them. They accused London of holding up the increase in an attempt to pressure other members into agreeing to a revision of the EEC budget.

Mrs. Thatcher was responding Thursday to calls in Britain and abroad for changes in Britain's sta-tus in the Common Market or for complete British withdrawal from the 10-nation community that it joined nine years ago.

Analysts said Mrs. Thatcher appeared reluctant to enter a new plomatic battle in the midst of the Falklands crisis.

She said the government was considering its next move in the dispute out repeated that she would not rush her reaction.

Reagan Reported to Favor Cluster As Basing Method for MX Missiles

By Richard Halloran New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - President Reagan has designated the socalled cluster plan as the preferred method for basing the MX mis-siles, according to administration and congressional officials.

They said Wednesday that Mr. Reagan ordered the Defense Department to evaluate the new plan which would involve clustering 100 missiles in hardened silos in an area of 10 to 15 square miles (26 to 39 square kilometers). The officials emphasized that the selection of this proposal is not irrevocable, but only the leading candidate as a means of emplacing the missiles. The plan is the most recent of two dozen proposals, dating from the Carter administration, for basing the new generation of intercontinental missiles, each carrying 10 nuclear warheads. The MX, for missile experimental, is intended to give the United States a new long-renge weapon with high accuracy and explosive power, based so that they could survive even a So-would attempt to destroy or de-flect incoming Soviet warheads several hundred miles in space. The first warheads that got through that defense, Pentagon of-ficials say, would hit the missile base and explode, releasing intense heat and radiation that would destroy the other incoming missiles.

If all goes according to the plan, surviving MX missiles could still be launched through the debris, radiation and smoke.

Sept. 15 Deadline

The officials said Mr. Reagan signed a directive earlier this week telling Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger that he would like an answer to his request for an evaluation by Sept. 15 so he could make his own decision before Oct. 1. The president also was said to be eager to make his decision before opening arms-reduction nego-

Even with Mr. Reagan's tenta-tive backing, the latest plan faces several obstacles. The basing plan may violate SALT-2, which has been observed by the United States and the Soviet Union even though unratified.

An analysis of the treaty by the staff of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee said the pact "obligates the parties not to start construction of additional fixed intercontinental ballistic missile launchers." The shouts and whistles echoed across the gilded cupola and through the chandeliers as Luis Lima, who was playing Tosca's Cavaradossi, stood frozen in a dramatic pose. In this capital city of 12 million, the war over the Falkland Islands seems distant. Yet, in small ways, it touches every aspect of Argentine life.

No one would stop going to the opera in a country where more than 40 percent of the population is of Italian extraction. But at the bus stops outside the Colon, where the patrons of Paradise waited in orderly lines after the performance, every other lapel was decorated with a fraying strand of ribbon of blue and white, the national colors.

A popular restaurant on the Avenida Recon-quista, the London Grill, didn't go out of business. It merely renamed itself "The Grill" and removed Queen Elizabeth's portrait from the entrance. The Franco-Inglesa pharmacy, one of the oldest in the city, is now the Franco pharmacy. The movie "Chariots of Fire," a tribute to two British athletes, was banned after a successful five-week run. But on television, one can freely watch American television shows, dubbed in Spanish.

At the 22,000-seat Luna Park boxing arena business has never been better. On a recent sweltering evening, the Cafe Ringside, with its framed snapshots of Argentina's greats, was filled with fans sipping rich black coffee with hot milk. The lines at the box office for $2 tickets winded around the block. Inside, Ubaldo Sacco and Roberto Alfaro were vying for the South American light welterweight championship. Argentina has 98 professional boxing arenas, but Luna Park, which boasts that Muhammad Ali fought here and Frank Sinatra sang here, features the stars.

"Four world titles were decided here last year," said Daniel Van der Beken, the arena's, press agent. And, he says, although he thinks about the Falklands war, "you can't stop the country for that. People want to be distracted. We can't let our inner calm slip away."

A week ago, proceeds from the Saturday night fight went to the "patriotic fund," a multimillion-dollar, government-sponsored project to raise money for the war. But this week, the only reminder of the conflict was a sports promoter who, passing through a group of radio reporters, did a takeoff of Foreign Minister Nicanor Costa Méndez's daily routine: 'No senor, no comments today," accompanied by exasperated gestures that have become familiar to thousands of television viewers

The ringside seats were filled with men with broken noses, former champs dressed in shiny suits, with blue and white ribbons in their lapels. "Coca-Cola and smiles for you," said an immense neon sign on the wall, but the fighters below do not look happy.

For 11 rounds, Sacco and Alfaro danced and snorted jabbing and hooking. Then, in the 12th and last round, Alfaro was cut over the right eye and the blood trickled down his face.

It was a good, close fight between two Argentines, and the judges pronounced Sacco the winner. He grabbed Alfaro by the knees in an affectionate bear hug and whirled him in the air as the crowd roared.

Argentina's most famous world champion, the late Luis Angel Firpo, known in the Unit-ed States as "the wild buil of the Pampas," has been featured on Argentine television lately in an old film clip where he pitches Jack Dempsey out of the ring. This spot is part of a propaganda campaign, designed to show what Argentina is about to do to Britain. Firpo is buried in "La Recoleta," Bucaos Aires' opulent cemetery where presidents in polished cedar caskets with silver handles lie in chapels with stained glass windows.

Many of the mansoleums have impressive statues of their occupants, including one of a young girl who, it is said, was buried alive after a heart attack and awoke to stagger across the street before expiring. Firpo's grave is notable for a larger-than-life bronze figure of the champ, dressed in his boxing robe, opened to show his massive chest.

Now the cemetery is full, explains a guide and the new Argentine heroes who have died for "the fatherland" will have to be buried elsewhere.

An authoritative statement in Pravda said that the time was ripe to resume a dialogue, and that the Russians were prepared to do so without preconditions. The statement was signed by Igor Alexan-drov, a pseudonym indicating that it was a Kremlin policy statement.

"It is our profound belief that there exists a real possibility for improving Soviet-Chinese relations," the party daily said. "To miss this possibility or to deliberately pass it would mean to act contrary to the interests of the peoples of the two countries."

The article, which contained the most detailed and open analysis to date of bilateral differences, coincided with the private visit to Pe-king by the Kremlin's top China expert, Mikhail S. Kapitsa. Formal Proposal

"The historical experience of China itself and our present reality convince us that the imperialists have never been, are not and will never become friends of Socialism. They only look for a chance to bleed the Socialist states white by dragging them into confrontation, into the arms race," Pravda said.

The statement complained that Soviet overtures to Peking so far have been met by a series of "obviously unacceptable preliminary conditions. It said the Chinese were insisting on a reduction of Soviet influence in Mongolia, Indochina and Afghanistan, with-drawal of Soviet troops along the Chinese border and territorial concessions in disputed border areas.

Moscow formally proposed to China last September that the two countries revive talks about improving relations, or at least reopen low-key border negotiations. Talks that began in October, 1979. were broken off following the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. The border talks, which have been conducted intermittently for almost a decade, were stopped for the same reason.

JERUSALEM — Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir told a Jerusalem Day gathering Thursday that if Israel gives up Jerusalem as the site for Palestinian autonomy talks, "we lose Jerusalem and also the negotiations." Moi Expels Opponent From Party

NAIROBI — President Daniel Arap Moi expelled his government's leading critic, former Vice President Oginga Odinga, from the ruling Kenya African National Union Party on Thursday, accasing him of damaging Kenya's reputation. Mr. Moi said that, when his term as chairman of the Organization of African Unity expired in August, he would take action against "prophets of doom."

Mr. Moi said Mr. Odinga had "engaged in divisive and destructive propaganda against the government." He also accused Mr. Odinga, who was vice president for three years after independence in 1963, of holding news conferences in Kenya and abroad at which he made "malicious charges damaging the good reputation of the country."

In February, Mr. Odinga made one of the fiercest attacks on government policy since Mr. Moi succeeded Jomo Kenyatta in 1978. He blamed Kenya's worsening economic situation on corruption, misuse of foreign exchange and poor planning. During a recent visit to Britain he was quoted as saying he would start a Socialist party in Kenya, but Wednesday he denied having said any such thing.

It was the president's first response to a growing movement on the far right to depict Mr. Baker, who was campaign manager for George Bush in the 1980 primaries, as a moderate who persistently undermines Reagan policies.

India, China End Talks on Border; Gap Is Still Wide

NEW DELHI - India and China ended four days of talks Thursday with basic differences over their 20-year border dispute still very wide, an Indian government spokesman said. He said, however, that there had been some progress in discussions of how the dispute should be solved and that the two sides have agreed to meet again at a place and date to be decided. The first sessions on the border dispute were held in December in Peking.

Both countries recognize that the border question is central to normalizing relations, which have been strained since a three-week frontier war in 1962, he added. India wants the Chinese to withdraw from 14,000 square miles (37,500 square kilometers) of its territory in the northwestern Ladakh region, and the Chinese claim nearly 50,000 square miles of territory in northeastern India.

The spokesman described the talks here as frank, friendly and wide-ranging Apart from discussing the border issue, both sides studied ways to improve relations in the fields of trade, science, technology and culture.

When the talks ended, the chief Chinese negotiator, Fu Hao, met with P.V. Narasimha Rao, India's external affairs minister.

Mr. Haig made this clear during his talks with Premier Andreas Papandreou. Born-Again Guatemalan General Expects Aid From U.S. Christians

هكذمن لأجل

By Raymond Bonner

GUATEMALA CITY - The three-man military junta has not asked for military or economic aid from the United States, primarily because the country has been of-fered millions of dollars by evangelical Christians in the United States, according to the president of the junta, Gen. José Efrain Rios

With this money, he said, Guatemala will develop model villages and a social, political and economic system that will be neither Communism nor democracy. He labeled it communitarianism.

While not ruling out the possibility that the country might ask for U.S. economic aid in the fu-ture, Gen. Rios Montt stressed that he did not need helicopters, weapons or any other type of mili-tary help to defeat leftist-led insurgents.
The only solution to the civil strife is love, the general, who is a born-again Christian, said during a recent interview. Representatives of Italian radio and television and of the Swiss newspaper Neue Zürcher Zeitung were also present.

Proposed Aid

According to U.S. congressional and diplomatic officials, the Reagan administration proposes to send about $2.5 million in spare parts for Guatemala's helicopters.

By October, the administration also wants to provide $50,000 for military training and $50 million in grants to belp the country with its balance of payments deficit. Gen. Rios Montt, 59, who came to power after a coup March 23, said there would be elections for a constituent assembly before the end of the year. The day after the interview, however, he told local reporters that the government had o election plans.

Asked if Communist parties would be permitted to take part in elections, he wavered, then said no. Guatemala's previous military government was widely considered one of the most repressive in Latin America. As a result, the U.S. Congress blocked military aid and permitted only minimal economic

Since Gen. Rios Montt came to power, kidnappings and killings in the cities have declined dramatically and there is less repression of politicians, foreign correspondents and Roman Catholic priests. According to the general, M.G. (Pat) Robertson, president of the Christian Broadcasting Network in Virginia Beach, Va., has offered to send missionaries and "more than a billion dollars."

(At the group's headquarters, Mr. Robertson said his organiza-tion sent $350,000 to Guatemala for earthquake relief several years ago and "we hope that we would be able to give comparable assistance at the present time." He said the network, which has annual revenues of $70 million, planned to send "a small team of medical and agricultural experts" to Guatemala about June 1.)

Gen. Rios Montt called communitarianism "the human relation that does not come from that is of the family, the sharing of everything the working for the community."

Under communitarianism, he said, fundamentalist missionaries would help build model villages, each with a school, civic center and health center. A peasant would be given "his private house" with "his own property so he can have his chicken and his pig."

Asked about the politicians and officers who want to share power with him or take it from him foreign diplomats and Guatemalan politicians say at least four groups are plotting — Gen. Rios Montt responded: "I am the one who has the power up to this moment. Within half an hour they can shoot me without any problem.

Leftist Massacre Reported

GUATEMALA CITY (UPI) A leftist guerrilla massacre of peasant Indians has left 40 women and children and three men dead, raising to 69 the number of people killed in three such attacks this week, authorities charged.

At least 50 guerrillas armed with automatic tifles and wearing army combat fatigues surrounded the northwestern village of Saquilla on Tuesday, police said. They said the guerrillas shot to death three civil patrolmen, 14 women and 26 children ranging in age from three months to 14 years.

Reagan's Caribbean Aid Plan Is Amended by Senate Panel

WASHINGTON - The Reagan edministration suffered a major setback in foreign-aid policy when the Senate Foreign Relations Com-mittee transformed the president's Caribbean basin initiative into a multilateral program to be run by the World Bank The vote Wednesday shocked administration officials and the committee chairman, Charles H. Percy, Republican of Illinois, who was attempting to arrange reconsi-deration of the amendment. Mr. Reagan's plan was a bilateral aid program in which the Unit-ed States would send $350 million this year to several Central American countries, including $128 million to El Salvador. It was a pet project for the White House. Sen. Christopher J. Dodd, Democrat of Connecticut, introduced the critical amendment, changing the plan from a bilateral program to a "trust fund" to be operated by the World Bank. Sen. Dodd argned that this would make other countries more interested in participating as donors. At first Sen. Dodd was defeated on a tentative vote, but when the committee regrouped, his amendment carried, 9-8. Sen. Charles McC. Mathias Jr., Republican of Maryland, provided the key vote. Sen. Percy contended that Sen. Mathias had misunderstood the impact of the Dodd amendment and insisted that the committee should reopen the entire bill which passed 16-1. Sen. Dodd said reconsidering the measure would amount to "aborting the system"

Start Back at SALT-2

Surprise: Leonid Brezhnev objects to the Reagan START proposals. Mr. Reagan, he complains, would bite into the branch of strategic arms, land-based missiles, in which the Soviets have made their heaviest investment. Mr. Brezhnev offers another approach, centering on freezing deployment of the new weapons with which the Reagan administration intends to reduce what it (alone) regards as a current Soviet edge.

This Brezhnev approach is no more acceptable to the Reagan administration than its proposals are to the Kremlin. Mr. Brezhnev invites the United States to surrender, by a freeze, its arms-building leverage in the negotiations about to begin. He skips past Mr. Reagan's concern for those especially accurate and powerful, and thus dangerous and destabilizing, land-based missiles.

The Kremlin is operating on its old SALT-1 and 2 premises that rough parity exists and will be accepted as such by both powers. It can see the nuclear debate bubbling in America as in Europe and wishes to put Mr. Reagan's arms-building and arms-control programs to the test of public opinion over the next year or two. For his part, Mr. Reagan has repudiated the earlier SALT premises and appears confident his strategic and political logic will carry him through. That the first strategic arms talks in three years are about to begin is no small comfort to those who feel that a negotiating connection is a vital U.S. interest, the more so in that political tensions are bound to roil Soviet-U.S. relations indefinitely. But to look at the divide separating the opening bargaining positions, and to think of the conviction and bureaucratic weight behind them, is to realize that what Mr. Reagan and Mr. Brezhnev are now joining is a negotiation that may go on for years - conceivably until long after both men have departed from power. In the interim, is arms building to run free?

Its superior economic and technological base gives the United States an advantage, or at least a temptation. But the Soviet Union has a countering advantage: its relative immunity to public opinion.

To stay in the game for the long haul, Mr. Reagan must stay in it for the short haul. The best way is to go back to SALT-2 and, if not to ratify that treaty, to use and update its valuable provisions. Mr. Brezhnev is ready to "preserve everything positive that has been achieved earlier." It would cost Mr. Reagan nothing except a bit of pride to agree.

After Their Campaigns

Keep in mind that political contributions such as those listed below are perfectly legal and are the most effective means of financing expensive congressional campaigns. Small contributions from the folks back home are nice, but, increasingly, candidates rely on large, nationally based political action committees for the bulk of their campaign funds.

In 1979-80, the four political action committees that gave the most money to candidates for federal office were sponsored by the National Association of Realtors, the United Auto Workers, the American Medical Association and the National Automobile Dealers Association. Last week the House passed a bill to subsidize mortgages on new homes to the tune of $1 billion this year. The Senate Banking Committee has reported a similar bill that would grant $5 billion in subsidies over the next five years. This bill is a favorite of the home builders, but the entire industry — including the realtors — will benefit if it is enacted. The realtors' PAC contributed $1,536,573 during the last campaign.

In December, 1979, Congress guaranteed $1.5 billion in loans to the Chrysler Corporation, saving that company from bankruptcy, at least for the time being, and preserving hundreds of thousands of jobs. The United Auto Workers" PAC contributed $1,422,731 to candidates in 1979-80.

Recently, the Senate Commerce Committee reported a bill that would prohibit regulation of the professions by the Federal Trade Commission. The American Medical Associ-ation's PAC gave $1,348,985 to candidates in the last congressional election.

The Senate Commerce Committee adopted this week, and its House counterpart is considering, a resolution that would nullify a proposed FTC regulation requiring used-car dealers to disclose known defects to buyers. The PAC of the National Automobile Dealers Association contributed $1,035,276 to federal office-seekers in 1979-80.

Congressional votes are influenced by numerous factors, including the interests of diverse constituencies and the objective merits of the proposal at hand. Not every supporter of the bills cited received PAC contributions. But to an increasing extent, large sums of money are being contributed to political campaigns by special-interest groups, and it is hard to believe that the practice is not having an impact on the legislative process.

On Reaganomics After Inflation

For the U.S. economy, a shaky episode of ruinously high inflation and slack growth appears to be nearing a welcome end. The indicators remain mixed, to be sure, and unexpected new glitches could turn recent rosy forecasts into hash. But most financial experts are predicting that inflation will keep receding, eventually settling around an annual rate as low as 5 percent. And this, for a nation rocked by months of inflation at more than double this rate, offers a real hope for greater stability and economic vigor.

Squeezing inflation out is not achieved without costs. Business failures are up, factory production is down and unemployment has continued to grow. Even so, the nation's economic prospect is considerably brighter than it was a few months ago. While production is still slipping, April retail sales showed their biggest gain in more than a year.

By summer's end the worst of the recession is expected to be past. As for Reaganomics itself, the verdict is not yet in. But the oncescorned supply-side policies deserve at least partial credit for bringing down the inflation rate and bracing the dollar. The challenge ahead, for both president and Congress, is to nail down these gains without prolonging the recession. It won't be easy.

The Spud War Moves West

Maine potato farmers have made headlines with their attempts to block cheaper Canadian potatoes from coming across the border. Unfair competition, they say.

Now the spud war is moving west. Idaho farmers are protesting against imports of cheap potatoes - from Maine. (Idaho russets are considered classier than the typical Aroostook County product, but they are more expensive.) Now the next thing is to see whether the Idaho farmers will organize a boycott of Maine potatoes, by blocking the highways, dumping potatoes and being generally disagreeable, as Maine farmers have been doing to the Canadian potatoes.

It would make more sense for both Maine and Idaho farmers to put their efforts into meeting the competition. That way, everybody would benefit, especially the consumer. - From the Worcester (Mass.) Telegram.

Hinckley's Parents Look Back

The public agony of John Hinckley Jr.'s parents mirrors the private agony of many fathers and mothers. Could the parents have done something differently to prevent their son or daughter from going astray? Might the Hinckleys' son not have tried to assassinate the president if they had hung on a little longer instead of sending him away from home as a psychiatrist suggested?

What parental heart could fail to be touched when this father broke down and saw this stern decision - "You're on your own. Do whatever you want" - to have been the greatest mistake of his life?

Such moments may come to parents. But they are not the time to dwell on the past. on what might have been. They can be the impulse to look ahead, to consider how the parents' love can best be expressed now. By recalling such promise to others as well as themselves, the Hinckleys' ordeal could serve a healing purpose far beyond the courtroom. - From the Christian Science Monitor.

Mrs. (Ex-Mrs. Ex-Mrs.) America

Rhonda McGeeney, 29, was chosen Mrs. America at the recent pageant in Las Vegas. Mrs. McGeeney has been married three times, has been divorced twice and has given up custody of her young son.

As the nation's new Mrs. America, she hopes her dilemmas can help her provide answers to her contemporaries. "I believe very strongly in marriage. I don't advocate divorce," she says. "But I do advocate the strength to deal with it and grow with it. One out of two marriages fail today. There are millions of women who need a role model."

Her attitude may be commendable, but the contest judges need a rap on their scorecard. Her home-life experiences should have eliminated her from the contest. Once a Mrs. is fine. Twice a Mrs. might be satisfactory. But three times a Mrs. by age 29 makes one wonder whether she was in Las Vegas for the contest or a quickie divorce.

After their skill with wireless telegraphy had passed the experimental stage, their activity came to the notice of the navy yard station in the most pointed fashion. Official messages from Annapolis were strangely interrupted. HARBOUR GRACE, Newfoundland - Amelia Earhart (Mrs. George Palmer Putnam) waved goodbye to her pilot and friends and took off at 5.50 p.m. local time for "the other side." Her speedy Lockheed plane flashed off into a dull, cloudy sky, typical of this fogbound, stormy region. The definite destination of the bobbedhaired, boyish-looking young trans-Atlantic airwoman is unknown even to her husband, although it is believed almost to a certainty that she will attempt to fly direct to Paris. It is estimated that, given good luck, she should cover the distance in 15 hours, which means that the motor of her plane would be heard over Le Bourget about 2 p.m. on Sunday.

Eastern Europe Is Increasingly a Danger Zone

PARIS — The gravity of history is the force which will destroy the Soviet system as we know it now. Romania, the latest case in point, illustrates the general deterioration of the system Stalin created at the end of the 1940s.

The country at the same time is in an extremely bad economic condition, which has provoked popular unrest and, last fall, strikes among Romania's miners. But the political evolution is the most interesting development, following Ceausescu's past successes in staking out a certain autonomy for Romania in foreign policy. There is, moreover, a precedent. North Korea under Kim Il Sung has gone even further down the road of glo-rified personalities and nepotic rule. The son of the North Korean ruler, dictator since 1948, is being built up as the only person with such qualities as betit the successor

ing toward the monarchical system which is its historical inheritance from the Confucian dynastic rule it knew for centuries under the vassalage of the Manchu Empire in China, and under the rule of Yi kings, who ruled Korea from the 14th century until 1910.

What has happened in Romania is not wholly unlike what happened before the war, when King Carol and Madame Lupescu ruled through a single party, the Front of National Renascence. Poland was under the rule of its army from 1926 to the war, after an unsuccessful five-year experiment in parliamentary democracy. Now the army rules Poland again, this time after an unsuccessful ex-periment in Communism. Poor Albania was a tribal sociback toward what it was before is Czechoslovakia, which has the misfortune to have been a democracy. Democracy is the one thing that is impossible to restore in the Soviet system. Nearly anything else is possible, so long as it is authoritar-ian and clothes itself in languages and forms resembling those of Soviet Communism — and so long as it scrupulously respects the de-mands of Soviet national security

These days there is an atmosphere of fin de règne in Bucharest, which neither the cult of Ceausescu nor his relatives' hold on essen-

Despite evident disarticulation of the regime

the direction of free-market eco-nomics, and the failures of Polish government explain why the Russians tolerated the restless early evolution of Solidarity.

They have tolerated the eccentricities of the Ceanseact regime in Romania because Ceausescu controlled his country. Also, it is not easy to dictate a new order to a country whose leader, like Nicolae Ceausescu, holds the loyalty of his army. The exact, ultimate loyalty of the Polish Army, for that manter, remains uncertain.

And this is the problem for the rest of the world. It would be reasonable to argue, taking the very long view, that the Soviet system will fade, over time, and that its components will shed their specifically Soviet characteristics and revert to what historically they have themselves always been. Nothing dramatic need happen. Erosion not collapse, will take place.

But it cannot be that simple, because Russians' sense of their own country's security is bound up in the continued existence of the Soviet system as it presently exists. Yet Moscow is steadily losing the power to control what happens.

The Soviet Union was able to order troops into Budapest to put down the rebellion in 1936, or into Prague in 1968. Poland in 1981 and 1982 has not been so simple a problem, and the Soviet, government besitated for a very long time over what to do. Its roubles are not over, as the demonstrations which took place in Poland early this month clearly showed. Romania is also a problem. Can a more pliable successor to President Ceausescu really be arranged? Veiled criticisms of him are now appearing in the East European press, presumably with Soviet blessing, But even if political trou-bles are somehow brought under control, the economic crises of Romania and Poland remain very severe, and the Soviet Union is in no position to do much to help The Soviet system in Eastern Europe must eventually come to an end, but this will not happen without shocks and a series of grave crises. The Soviet Union faces years of trouble. For just that reason, so do the West European countries and the United States Eastern Europe is becoming the most dangerous place in the world.

In the mixed metaphor of two of America's favorite pastimes, a lot of people would rate Italy like this: good food, no hit. On the part of outsiders, there is a sense of, well, inefficiency. Italy was the first European country to volunteer to participate in Egyptian-Israeli peacekeeping with naval forces. Its early accept-ance of the deployment of intermediate-range nuclear weapons has been essential, given the insistence by West Germany that it would agree to deploy only if at least one other NATO member went along. Italy's steadfastness on these and other issues is to be valued for its own sake. But that is not the only significance. The Italians say they derive from it a self-confidence that is actually leading them to increase foreign aid and diplomatic involvement in North Africa and the Middle East. "We are ready now to play on Team B because we know we can play on Team A," said an Italian government official at the Berlin meeting

With serious question marks of one sort or another overhanging Greece and Turkey as Alliance re liables around the Mediterranean. Italy's constancy takes on added that Italians find themselves wondering why this quality seems to go largely uncelebrated. 01982, The Washington Post.

Ability to Visualize

The ability to visualize objects in space and mentally rotate or manipulate these objects is thought to be correlated with skills needed in such fields as mathematics, engineering, physics, architec-ture and design.

Crowley Jr., of

He shied away from using this study to explain the differences between men and women. "You have to be very cautious in drawing conclusions about sex differences. There clearly are differences. Sex hormones could be one factor that plays a role in sex differences that have already been observed."

It is true that women have lower levels of androgens than men, but scientists cannot jump to the con-clusion that this is the explanation for measured differences on intellectual tests, cautioned Dr. Hier.

This view was seconded by Georgetown University physiolo-gist Estelle Ramey, a well-known researcher and feminist, who said: "There are physiological difference es between men and women that relate to hormones. Those differences are largely reproductive, but there are some differences that relate to brain organization as well as muscle performance. But these differences are small as compared to the effect of environmental differences. I think that's the critical

In the study, 19 men with a disorder known as "idiopathic hypo-gonadotropic hypogonadism"who fail to undergo normal puber-ty and have significantly reduced levels of male hormones — were compared with a control group of normal men and a third group of men who had acquired the disorder later in life.

As a group, the 19 were found to have markedly impaired spatial ability. Researchers found that receiving hormone treatment after puberty did not affect spatial reasoning. There was no difference among the three groups in verbal ability.

Military Reaction Feared

Radio-Controlled Is the Name of the Toy

By Ron Alexander

New York Times Service YORK — For his 5th birthday last year. Paul Jude Sorvillo was given a radio-controlled robot that came in a box and cost around $10 and which, with shouts of glee and the flick of a knob on his hand-held transmitter, he was able to make go forward, backward and turn until it finally turned into the living-room wall once too often. This year the youngster is asking for a radio-controlled car, or a radio-controlled horse. Paul, his parents report, thinks such toys are "incredible"

Paul is not the only one. Across the United States, people of all ages say they are finding radio-controlled objects relaxing, exciting, enlightening, thrilling and, the most frequently heard word, competitive. With the approach of warmer weather, these loyal hobbyists are being joined by new radio-control fans, some of whom may even be deserting video-game arcades for the great outdoors.

Prices vary considerably. At Macy's, where sales are reported to be "very good," cars range from $15 to $110 for a scale-model Mercedes-Benz. But those tuning in to radiocontrol as a hobby can expect to pay even

Bigger Models

Competitive racing cars with fiberglass or aluminum chassis are $250 and up for 1/12thscale electric models powered by rechargeable batteries; prices are $400 and up for %-scale gas-powered cars. Boats, most often made of balsa or hardwood, begin around $250. Air-planes, constructed of balsa and with all equipment, start at $400 and can soar to more than $1,000.

A total of 13 frequencies have been allocated by the Federal Communications Commission for hobbyists using radio-controlled boats, planes and cars either for fun or in organized competitions; each frequency number has a corresponding color code. Only one boat, plane or car with the same color can operate at the same time within an approximately 2-square-mile area; otherwise, interference could cause loss of control of the model. A "clothespin board," from which radio-control participants remove clothespins corresponding to their color codes, usually in-dicates which colors are in use. An FCC license is required for all hobby radios.

At the Model Boat Pond in New York's
Central Park the other day, Joseph Sneller, an editor at McGraw-Hill, was winning admira-tion and attention as his 3½-foot remote-controlled steam trawler glided serenely across, around and back again over the basin's green waters. Sneller says he is intrigued with the possibilities offered by radio control. "It helps put you in the picture," he said.

A Startling Swan

On some of its voyages, the trawler has shared the pond with radio-controlled sail-boats practicing for a Central Park Model Yacht Club race, a couple of completely sub-mergible radio-controlled submarines with nonexplosive torpedoes, a shark's fin and a startling swan whose neck movements and speed were controlled by some landlubber's

It took Sneller more than six months to create his trawler from scratch. Although he is not certain how much money he has invested in it, he has, he says, seen comparable models selling for more than $10,000.

Price aside, when does a toy become a hob-y? "When you want to make it better than it is when it comes out of the box," says Robert Calandra, the manager of Polk's Hobby De-partment Store on Fifth Avenue, who on Sun-days goes to Floyd Bennett Field in Brooklyn to fly the remote-controlled airplane he put Calandra has invested nearly $1,000 in his plane, which has a 72-inch wing span. In addition to going forward, turning and reversing, the plane spins, stalls and causes Calandra considerable consternation as well as pleasure. "One error," he says matter-of-fact-"can be a total wipeout."

Nevertheless, on Staten Island, George Brown, owner of Brownie's Pro & Sport Shop in downtown Port Richmond, reports that airplanes are far and away his radio-control best seller this year. Brown says that in the last six months he has sold about two dozen Falcon 56 trainer-type models alone.

And Frank DeVore, a building inspector, eagerly awaits meeting with the 60 or so other members of the Westchester Radio Aero Modelers Inc. at their field in Putnam County. There the members race or perform aerobatics with their fuel-powered radio-controlled planes -- the largest are 4-size replicas - and gliders.

(Insurance is advised by radio-controlled-ane experts. It is included with membership in the Washington-based Academy of Model Aeronautics, which has more than 82,000 members. Its annual dues are $30).

Competitive Drive

Bob Husted, who works for an investment bank, calls radio-controlled car racing "a safe way to get the competitive drive out of your system on a one-to-one basis." Husted is a familiar figure at Elmsford Raceway, where the remote-controlled car competition is

The raceway and an on-premises hobby shop have been run for 16 years by Lou del Rosario, who says radio-control "is turning out to be something the whole family can do together." The Punters are a case in point.

On weekends, Paul Punter, his wife, Peggy, and their three children pile into the family car and, together with their radio-controlled racing cars, leave their home in Jamaica, Queens, and head for Elmsford or the Staten sland Mini Indy or other radio-control race tracks from Maine to Virginia. PARIS — The holes gape in the towering is made I towering jagged walls. The setting is familiar from the news bulletins and the Paris Match pho-

A figure ventures into the foreground and bullets begin to pepper the tarmac. Nabil, photographer and adventurer, trafficker and mythomaniac is on another exercise of bravado. A product of the Lebanese civil war. Crossing an exposed stretch of tarmac, he jackrabbits to safety behind the rubble and puffs himself up to the cheers of his men on the other side.

Baghdadi has made a film about Beirut - not about the shooting war, for that, he thinks, has been exploited enough. He doesn't want to explain anything. "Petites Guerres" (Little Wars), one of the films selected for the "Un Certain Regard" section at the Cannes film festival outside the competition proper, shows how people in violence and there are no apocalyptic flourishes. It is simply an apology for a generation that has grown up on war.

Aging Experience

"I wanted to turn the clichés upside down and show people who live and want to live," said Bagh-dadi, 31, who finished his studies in Paris and went back to Beirut in 1975, just as the conflict began to rip apart the Arab world's most so-phisticated community. "In the past eight years, I feel as if I have aged by 20."

Baghdadi's father was a dentist to the French Army, part of a bourgeoisie that still looks back to the days of colonial stability. Baghdadi is something else. He has that Lebanese facility that makes him at home on the Boulevard Saint-Germain or in the Khan el-Khalil bazaar in Cairo, but he is also pulled, like the rest of his generation, toward the American

He has had his taste of the United States. With three other Arab filmmakers, he was chosen in 1980 to present his documentaries on Lebanon at U.S. universities. It grew out of a series of short portraits he had made of Beirut characters. One was Nabil Ismaili, a 24-year-old photographer for a leftist daily, more daredevil than professional, who began a success-of two other young Beirutis. Talai Bey (played by Roger Hawa) is heir to one of Lebanon's great feudal clans and is torn between his easygoing life in Beirut and his in-herited responsibilities. The female lead, the film's strongest performance, is played by Soraya Khoury, 25. a Lebanese-Austrian dancer who in real life stars in the Caracalla dance group.

It is Soraya Khoury who is closest to Baghdadi's own experience, to accept it. "It's the trash heap of the Middle East today," Baghdadi said. "All the dregs of the Arab world are swept into it."

The film is full of its decadence: the hopelessness, the drugs, the broken families, the adulterated culture, as well as the roadblocks

His greatest obstacle in making the film was trying to strip it of specific partisan references. "Evespecific partisan references. "Every street has a political connotation," he said. "Nothing is neutral anymore." The scenes in the country, at Talal Bey's feudal head-quarters, were shot in three diffactions and the property of the said. "Nothing is neutral anymore." Baghdadi also attempted to unravel the complex code of symbols that governs the Arab cinema, whereby a red light on an actor's face suggests sensuality and every gesture can be given a political in-"I wanted to force people to ask themselves questions," said Bagh-dadi, who hopes that his film will be distributed both in the Arab countries and in the West. Dance Scene Is Booming in Paris

PARIS — While Leningrad's Kirov Ballet is occupying the 3,700-seat Palais des Congrès, it is by no means without competition in one of the busiest of Paris dance seasons. The Paris Opéra has just made a major addition to its reper-tory, the Théatre de la Ville season is rich in variety, and a promising dance season has succeeded Peter Brook's vest-pocket "Carmen" at the Bouffes du Nord.

The idea of mounting John Neu-meier's "Midsummer Night's Dream" was a welcome one, both for the ballet, which demands the resources of a major company, and for the Opera, which has acquired

The Paris production is essentially a copy of the original, mounted five years ago at the Hamburg State Opera, including Jürgen Rose's sensous sets and Jurgen Rose's sensious sets and costumes, which move with the same fluidity and sensitivity as Neumeier's choreography between the court and the enchanted forest.

The ballet is a showcase for a strong company, and the Parisians put their own stamp on it with a cast that had in the principal double.

Hong Kong Calls Textile Talks Crucial

By David Stamp

HONG-KONG - Failure of textile talks between Hong Kong and the European Economic Community next month could severely disrupt international trade, Hong Kong's trade commissioner, Lawrence Mills, said Thursday.

in an interview, Mr. Mills warned that if the talks, which begin June 1 in Brussels, do not bring an agreement on the level of cuts in Common Market imports of Hong Kong textiles, two major trade agreements could collapse. If that happened, he said, "The whole fabric of international trade is going to be ripped apart."

Both Hong Kong and the EEC were among the signatories last December of an extension of the Mala-Fiber Arrangement, Under the agreement, governments are allowed to negotiate quotas on their textile imports with individual producer nations.

However, the Common Market has said it will withdraw from the MFA unless it obtains by September what it calls "acceptable bilateral agreements" on further cuts in the quotas. These are aimed at protecting the EEC's recession-hit clothing makers from competition from developing nations.

EEC Demands

Mr. Mills said that the EEC and Hong Kong were still some dis-tance apart after informal talks here last month. The Europeans' demands include a 10-percent cut m export quotas for the major suppliers — Hong Kong, Taiwan South Korea and Macao — and limits on angual quota increases.

He said the stability of the MFA was vital to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, which covers wider trade issues. "If the MFA disappears, obviously the EEC is still going to take some form of import action. Either it will just go ahead and do it in total disregard of the law, or it will seek to justify its selective restric-tions under the GATT," he said. But if the EEC applied restrictions universally, as GATT requires, it could expect rapid retali-ation from nations such as the United States, and serious damage to international trade would result,

Jury Awards Investor $1.1 Million from Hutton The Associated Press

CHICAGO — A jury has awarded an investor more than $1 million from E.F. Hutton Group and one of its former salesmen who was alleged to have excessively traded the customer's account in order to generate commissions.

The award Wednesday by a circuit court jury here included $1 million in punitive damages against Hutton, $100,000 in actual damages against the investment firm and $5,000 in punitive damages against the former salesman, Paul G. McBride, said Joel Bellows, lawyer for plaintiff Edwin W. Dato.

A Hutton spokesman called the punitive damages "totally unjustifiable" and said the broker would appeal.

Mr. McBride was charged with "churning" the account, which was defined as "trading a customer's account excessively to generate commissions rather than to earn profits for the customer. Mr. Bellows said witnesses testified during the trial that a commodities account opened by Mr. Dato in Pebruary, 1973, plummeted from $300,000 to $25,000 during a 15-week period begin-ming in October of that year.

Mr. Dato charged that unscrupulous overtrading by Mr. McBride caused the loss, Mr. Bellows said. Hutton's lawyer in the case, David A. Epstein, said the defense contended that "the customer was pushing McBride, or doing the

Drysdale Scare Underlines Risks Of Juggling Government Securities

From Agency Dispatches
NEW YORK — Fears have subsided that a small securities firm's failure to come up with about $200 million in interest payments this week would push other firms to the brink. But the affair has raised numerous questions about the risks of juggling billions of dollars of U.S. Treasury bonds and notes to pull in profits on short-term fluctuations in interest rates.

One of the biggest questions is how a securities firm that opened its doors in February with about $25 million in assets and 30 cmployees could grow so fast and get into so much trouble that by May its problems could threaten the solvency of major brokerage houses.

The firm, Drysdale Government Securities, set off a furor this week when it failed to make interest payments on securities it had borrowed. Chase Manhattan Bank.

the lending of many of the securities, at first denied that it was liable for Drysdale's obligations. But on Wednesday Chase agreed to make the payments. Manufactur-ers Hanover Trust, also involved in transactions involving Drysdale, made a similar pledge.

That apparently eliminated the immediate risk of a domino-like string of failures by firms that might not have been able to satisfy their obligations because Drysdale failed to pay them.

Chase's Fear

Chase officials said privately that they agreed to pay $160 milion in interest payments owed by Drysdale to about 30 brokerage firms because they feared Drys-dale's inability to pay its debts could force several brokerage firms out of business. Chase, the thirdlargest U.S. bank, said that, based on what it now knew, the mopping up would reduce second quarter after-tax income by $135 million.

Drysdale, meanwhile, has been lying low. On Wednesday, the firm issued a statement saying that it was not bankrupt but has halted trading. A bankruptcy would have prevented Chase from taking over and paying the bills and could have pushed several brokers to the brink of insolvency, government and securities industry officials

Drysdale's president is Richard Taffe, who has spent 20 years in Taffe, who has spent 20 years in the bond business and was an executive at Kidder Peabody & Co. before joining Drysdale. Within four months of opening, the firm was trading government securities worth at least several billion dollars and doing business with the biggest banks and brokers on Wall

So far Wall Street sources are ascribing the collapse of Drysdale to bad business judgment rather than improprieties. Said a source close to the company: "Every asset is there. Everything is accounted for. All the receipts are there. Every security has been found."

Drysdale had borrowed an esti-mated $4.5 billion in government bonds and notes. As part of the arrangements, it also agreed to turn over the interest due on the securities — through Chase — to the original owners, Wall Street's big securities firms. But Drysdale is believed to have used the interest to speculate on the market and, because of reverses, found itself unable to pay the interest when it

Such financings - known as repurchase agreements, or repos — are standard procedure in the govemment securities market, but, as the Drysdale fiasco showed, they are not without risk, even though the underlying Treasury securities are of the highest quality. "The lesson is one that people know: You have to be careful in credit appraisals of your customers," said Arthur Kalita, executive director of the Public Securities Association, a trade group whose members include government securities dealers. "Risk management is extremely important in highly liquid, volatile markets."

For banks, the use of Treasury securities as collateral to arrange loans from businesses and others with spare cash to invest has been the fastestgrowing source of funds in recent years. Combining those borrowings with other overnight loans, large banks now roll over more than $100 billion of debt a day, up from less than $28 billion eight

Despite the billions of dollars of such transactions outstanding analysts say that the legal status of the securities underlying a repurchase agreement is unclear. Do they belong to the party who sold them and agreed to repurchase later? Or do they belong to the party that purchased them temporarily?

Analysts also are asking whether Chase, as the middleman, is legally liable for the missed interest payments. Although it agreed to meet the payments out of its own pocket, Chase reserved the right to suc later to recover its losses.

And they are asking whether another Drysdale could happen. The answer is probably yes, dealers say, noting that this is not the first time a firm has got in trouble in the repo market. In 1975, for example, there was the case of the Financial Corp. of Kansas City, which eventually went bankrupt after financing about $1.8 billion of government securities via repos.

Dealers in Treasury securities concede that they cannot always know exactly what trades a cus-tomer is making with other firms, but they say that is not enough of a reason to impose stricter regulations on the market.

"The human desire to become rich beyond all dreams of avarice will always be there," said Ralph Peters, chairman of Discount Corp. of New York, a government be guided by rules of common sense" in overseeing its customers.

The effect on Chase also is another question. Some analysts esti-mated that Chase's covering of the payments might cause it to have a second quarter loss of $35 million. compared with previous estimates of earnings of around $100 mil-

NEW YORK — Moody's Investors Service has lowered its ratings on Bethlehem Steel's five senior debentures and three pollution-control revenue bonds to BAA-I from A-3. It also said Thursday that it was lowering the rating on Bethlehem's 4½-percent subordinated debentures, due 1990, to BAA-2 from BAA-1.

Moody's said it expects that difficult conditions in the domestic steel industry will allow only modest profitability and margins of debt protection over the intermediate term.

GM, Toyota End New Discussions

TOKYO — General Motors and Toyota Motor ended their second round of talks on joint production of compact cars in the United States without reaching any concrete agreement, a Toyota spokesman said Thursday.

The spokesman said the talks had "proceeded smoothly."

He said Jack Smith, GM's director of worldwide product planning, met with top Toyota officials for four days to discuss the joint venture, which was proposed in March. The first round of talks was held in April.

In Detroit, GM spokesman Harry Kelly Jr. would say only that no agreement had been reached.

Meanwhile, the newspaper Asahi reported that Toyota and GM have agreed to produce 200,000 passenger cars a year at a U.S. plant starting in the summer of 1984. Asahi said no production site had been decided. TOKYO - General Motors and Toyota Moproduction site had been decided.

NEAL Ascherson's "The Polish August" and the raft of other new books drawn from the 16 months of Poland's experiment with radical internal reform suffer a serious common problem. They were conceived, researched and written before martial law was declared last December 13 -an event that brutally terminated, albeit temporarily, the sway of Solidarity, the free trade union at the core of Poland's social upheaval.

The books were designed to be received in one spirit, and are being read in another. The effect is like watching a Greek tragedy in which the spectators know how badly every-thing will turn out but neither the writers nor the actors seem to. What results is a considerable credibility

The reformists were crushed overnight, all their hopes and ambitions, their debates, referenda and proposals rendered irrelevant. The riddle that remains is: how could Solidarity have been so popular and pervasive for well over a year and yet so weak in the face of repression? Why was it months before pro-Solidarity crowds again took to the streets? Ascherson has no

Ironically, he does put the proposition correctly when he writes early on that there were two main issues to be resolved following the strikes of August, 1980, that gave Solidarity its

The West saw only one: whether the Soviet Union would invade Po-land to reverse the summer's changes or not. The Poles, while admitting that the first question had a grimly terminal priority, found it almost bor-ing. They had lived with this sort of problem, on and off, for generations. Much more interesting to them was the second question: was it possible to govern Poland by consent rather than coercion, to give creative expression to the nation's underlying unity, as long as a Communist Party retained the formal monopoly of political pow-

For months the answer seemed to be yes, that somehow Poland was moving towards a form of democratic socialism in which party authority did not exclude such other major forces as Solidarity and the church. Suddenly, in one terrible night, the answer turned out to be a resounding no coercion proved the party's only recourse. Yet Ascherson's book is not about the party's preparations to crush the popular will; it is about the popular will, at least for now the apparent loser in Poland.

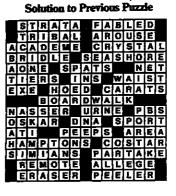

The biggest mystery in these new works — Lawrence Wechsler's "Soli-darity," a reprint from The New Yorker and "The Book of Lech Walesa," an anthology, are two of the other good ones — is that they all misinterpreted what was happening.

Some people evidently did sense what was going on. Andrzej Wajda, the Polish film director told me on a the Polish film director, told me on a visit to Washington in mid-October that he expected the end would come when "the police swoop down one night and arrest 5,000 of us." That sounded unduly pessimistic at the time, but, of course, it was absolutely right. If the end was so obvious, why did Solidarity not prepare for it? Why were the Polish people so stunned? These books do not, could not, deal with those greations. And that also with those questions. And that, alas, makes even Ascherson's otherwise extensive account incomplete.

But bearing that factor in mind,
"The Polish August" is a clear and compassionate study of why Solidarity emerged in the first place, and why, by inference, something like it is bound to come again. Ascherson sketches the history of popular sentiment in postwar Poland, the recurring tension between the alienated Communist apparatus and a populace with a profound yearning for spiritual lib

Ascherson has been writing about Poland for decades in British newspapers and has a strong feel for the Pol-ish temperament. He particularly understands the cyclical qualities of Polish political expression in which every 12 years, it seems — 1956, 1968-70 and 1980 -the leadership is overturn ed by strong popular protests. In each of these three cases, the new Communist authorities pledged themselves to reforms, to a closer relationship with the people, to a renewal of socialist principles. And each case ended in disappointment or disaster.

Ascherson's thesis is that party authority eroded because of the party's inability to govern adequately, to manage the economy, to inspire a modicum of loyalty. Even a relatively benign stance on culture and human rights (for a Soviet bloc state) failed to enlist national confidence. But more importantly, Ascherson observes, the decline of the party was matched by a surge in Polish national pride, especially following the selection of a Polish pope in 1978.

The combination of a perceived political varying and a strong perceived litical vacuum and a strong new sense that the people, acting under what amounted to divine guidance, might prevail, led to the extraordinary phe-nomenon called Solidarity.

The belief that a free trade union with 10 million members and a Catho-lic church commanding the allegiance of virtually the whole country could amass real power was not, even in retrospect, unrealistic. But where the people evidently went wrong was in the choice of tactics, an understandable impatience to make real changes, without a prudent sense that they might yet be defeated.

'Dangerous Period'

Walesa himself plainly did see the risks. In "The Book of Lech Walesa" (a collection of interviews, commentary and biographical notes first published in Poland), the Solidarity leader observes: "This is a very dangerous period we're in . . . Certain astonishing phenomena have appeared in the world, and they all have some kind of common denominator. A Polish pope, Solidarity, a new president in the U.S.A., a new president in France — nobody could have forseen a combination of forces like that. There's a certain freshness in the world, and a lot of good hope. But what will hap-pen if this hope proved to be false? If this new movement, scattered as it is over the whole world, proves incapable of converging and creating new forces — there'll be chaos, confusion and confrontation. That's what I'm frightened of most."

How right he was to be frightened.

Yet, there is a naive determinist faith worst that might happen but not able to control events to prevent it from coming about.

Poland today is emerging from a profound national depression. For all the history and antecedents that made the Solidarity period possible, looking back now, Polish behavior during those 16 months seems almost giddy. Gone are the freer press and open discussion. Gone is the world's fascination with this brave experiment. Now, the attitude in the West has turned sour: the Poles messed up, goes much of the prevailing argument, they did it to themselves, it's their fault, there is little are seen do for them little we can do for them.

All that makes what has happened even sadder. The Poles did let themselves down; they let those who be-lieved in them down; they gave in to the forces of darkness among themselves. They know it and we know it.

But if there is a message in Ascherson's book beyond the events it records, it is that there will be another upheaval in Poland because the same mix of elements that created the fer-ment in the first place still exists: a strong church, fierce nationalism and a party that, as Ascherson puts it, "has not worn a real foothold into the nation." The time may not come immediately, but it will certainly come.

WEST opened the hand with one W diamond, and heard a natural three-diamond bid on his left. South bid clubs at the four level, and North raised to game.

Wednesday's victory, which came on Coach Bill Fitch's 48th birthday, preserved a record of sorts; the Celtics have never lost four straight games in a playoff in their 36 NBA seasons.

Larry Bird was a factor for Bos-ton, scoring 20 points and grab-bing 20 rebounds, but Parish's play carried the team. He dressed quickly and left without talking to reporters, leaving his teammates to explain his turnaround.

"What happened tonight," Maxwell said, "was that we were run-ning the ball up court much quick-er and when they failed to get back on defense, it created a lot of oneon-one situations for Robert, Larry and myself. There are not many teams that can play against our big men in that situation. Actually, it was a reversal of what they did to us in the last three games."

Parish set the tone early. With the 76ers ahead, 6-4, he tied the score with a 15-foot jumper and then made six of his next seven shots. When he was replaced by Rick Robey with eight minutes remaining in the second quarter, he had scored 16 points.

Cunningham agreed. "They looked to double-team Andrew an awful lot," he said. "They did it with just about everybody. We're going to play a more physical game on Friday."

The credit for shutting down

Toney belonged to the guards: M.L. Carr, Danny Ainge and Gerald Henderson. Ainge and Henderson were also responsible for running the offense in the absence of Nate (Tiny) Archibald, who suf-fered a dislocated left shoulder in the third game Saturday.

COONEY COVERS UP — Gerry Cooney, who had to delay his heavyweight title fight against Larry Holmes because of a left shoulder injury, now has a nick on his nose and must wear full head gear in training for the June 11 bout at Las Vegas.

NHL Governors Split On Transfer of Rockies

NEW YORK - Despite 16 hours of discussion spanning two days, the National Hockey League's board of governors could not fit together all the puzzle pieces necessary to complete the pro-posed transfer of the Colorado Rockies franchise to Byrne Meadowlands Arena in East Rutherford, N.J. So on Wednesday the board's special session was re-cessed and scheduled to reconvene next week, no later than May 27.

"Nothing has been resolved," said John Ziegler, the league president, after a two-hour session that followed 14 hours of meetings.

"It is a total package or no package, so until all the elements are agreed upon, there will be no pack-

According to Ziegler and board members, the following elements are part of the package to be as-sembled if the Rockies move:

· Approval of either the sale of the Colorado franchise to buyers who would move it, or the transfer of the franchise under its current owner, Peter Gilbert. • Agreement on a transfer fee

Several sources on the board indicated that the financial problems of the package were close to resolution and were not the major stumbling block at this point. "It's realignment that's holding it up," said Harold Ballard, owner of the

The Rockies belong to the Smythe Division, along with Los Angeles, Vancouver, Edmonton and Calgary. If they move to New Jersey, it would be logical for them to play in the Patrick Division with the Patrick Division with the Patrick Division with the Rangers, the Islanders, the Flyers, the Pittsburgh Penguins and the Washington Capitals.

But that would leave the Smythe

Division with only four members. The Norris Division has six members, and board members indicated that pressure had been put on two Norris Division members the St. Louis Blues and the Winnipeg Jets — to have one switch to the Smythe Division. Both clubs were said to be resisting such pressure because of the increased travel costs associated with playing in that division, which has two West Coast teams. Under a new format adopted last season, the number of games teams played against members of their own division was increased to six times a season.

"It would be a substantial help, yes," he said Gilbert bought the Rockies in February, 1981, for $8 million. He

In the second half Gothenburg grew in strength and confidence to add further goals from Tjorborn Nilsson and Stig Frederiksson in the 61st and 65th minutes.

It was Holmgren who set Gothenburg on the winning path by making the opening goal with a teasing cross from the left. The Swede outpaced West German in-ternational Manfred Kaltz, who was handicapped by a broken toe, and crossed to the far post where Corneliusson made no mistake after goalkeeper Ulrich Stein and centerback Holger Hieronymus misread the center.

Despite territorial advantage, Hamburg was unable to create any clearcut chances as the visitors defended stubbornly with Ruben Svenssln in superb command at the back.

Kison (3-0) pitched eight imings to hand the Brewers their seventh loss in nine games. He did not allow a runner beyond second base as he gave up five singles, walked two and struck out five. He was aided by three double plays. Red Sox 6, Mariners 5 In Boston, Gary Allenson's two-out double in the 12th scored Dave Stapleton from first base to give Boston a 6-5 victory over Seattle. Stapleton had hit a broken-bat single to center off reliever Bill Cau-dill (4-3), the fifth Scattle pitcher.

Boston's Gleun Hoffman broke out of an 0-for-14 shamp with his fourth homer of the year.

Bine Jays 8, Indians 5 In Cleveland, Willie Upshaw singled home Rance Mullimiks with the go-ahead run to trigger a three-run Toronto eighth as the Blue Jays beat Cleveland, 8-5.

Tigers 6, A's 3 In Detroit, Alan Trammell hit a game-tying single in the sixth and scored the go-ahead run on a sin-gle by Enos Cabell as the Tigers extended their winning streak to seven games with a 6-3 victory over Oakland. For the A's, Wayne Gross hit his second home run in the sixth, and Rickey Henderson hit his second home run in two nights in the seventh.

Yankees 3, Royals 2

In Kansas City, Graig Nettles singled home one run and scored the eventual game-winner on a squeeze bunt by Willie Randolph

In Chicago, a throwing error by the Ranger second baseman, Doug Flynn, allowed Jerry Hairston to score the winning run with two out in the bottom of the ninth as the White Sox beat Texas, 6-5. Salome Barojas, who relieved in the seventh, well-resolve, is a restricted to a second with the seventh, earned his first major-league victory.

The Politics of Nudity

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK — One of the most unusual aspects of the Argentine political process is kidnapping. The custom evolved several years ago in response to the soaring cost of 30-second political spots on television.

Its originator was Ricardo Ustermann, an impoverished candidate for Buenos Aires water commissioner. Unable to afford television commercials. Ustermann had him-self kidnapped and held captive for two weeks. The resulting publicity pro-duced a landslide Baker victory at a price of only $760 the cost of hiring two kidnappers and renting a squalid one-room hideout.

In the next campaign 37 candidates had themselves kidnapped, with mixed results. Because editors become bored with kidnappings, news coverage declined and only 18 kidnappees were elected. Kidnapping might have ceased except for Emilio van Greditzer's claustrophobia.

Van Greditzer, a candidate for hoof and mouth inspector in the Pampas, balked when told it was time to be kidnapped. If I were tied up for two weeks in a squalid one-room hideout," he said, "my nerves would be so shattered I wouldn't be fit to inspect a hoof or a mouth for the next two years."

The solution to van Greditzer's problem revolutionized Argentine politics. On election day his campaign aides kidnapped the election officials and counted the ballots themselves. Van Greditzer won 93 percent of the vote.

Thereafter, the need to kidnap entire voting blocs as election day rolled around began to create housing problems. Rental prices on squalid one-room hideouts soared as high as $1,000 a day.

At this stage unpleasant solutions began to develop. People were kidnapped and never seen again. It was embarrassing to the government, which said they had probably taken up residence on the Riviera, but they were never seen there either.

Those who worried about Argentina's image sought gentler solutions. One of these came to world attention recently when a number of journalists were found wandering naked outside Buenos Aires.

All had been kidnapped in the city, driven out of town, robbed and stripped of their clothing. Ernani Esterhazy, chief executive of-ficer of one of Argentina's most prestigious political-services companies, in a recent visit to New York, told this correspondent that "the naked-wanderer program" was now the preferred solution to an acute political problem.

"That way," he said, "they get the message that we don't like their looks - without any awkward disappearances to explain or paying some gouging landlord $1,000 a day for a squalid one-room hide-Esterhazy was driving me up to the Adirondacks during our interview. I had phoned him after hearing from relatives in Newark that was in the United States to scout locations. He had agreed to pick me up. "As you can imagine," he said, "the effectiveness of the naked-wanderer program dimin-ishes significantly as people close to Buenos Aires become accustomed to finding kidnapped citi-zens roaming naked on their prop-

I asked Esterhazy if he had any other sites in mind. "Yes," he said. "The Adirondacks."

I understood then why his employees had insisted on handcuffing me before our interview began and why they had stopped just outside Armonk to remove every last stitch of my clothing. "But why me, Mr. Esterhazy?" I asked. l don't like your looks," he

Reslicing the American Pie

Neighbors, Grain Belt and so on - America

By Henry Allen Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON — Bye, bye, traditional American pie. For years we've been slicing the citizenry of the United States into Harry Homeowners, young marrieds, swing-ing singles, blue and white collars, haves, have-nots, teens, Bohemians, Mr. and Mrs. Front Porch U.S.A., blue-haired old ladies, mobs and snobs, Irving Upscale, Larry Lunchpail. Bye, bye.

Jonathan Robbin stopped waving a long time ago. Robbin is the 52-year-old president of the Claritas Corp., a geodemographic research firm that has resliced the American pie into 40 different lifestyle "clusters." from Blue-Blood Estates at the top (McLean, Va.: Potomac, Md.) to Hardscrabble at the bottom (poverty pockets in Appalachia).

He stands in his Rosslyn, Va., office overlooking Georgetown, and he smiles at the thought of the old groupings, "They're not very sophisticated," he says. "They're not very useful."

Useful means useful to Claritas customers, ranging from the Coca-Cola

Co. to Time Inc. to the AFL-CIO. These customers want to know who they can reach with their products and pitches — how to get the most bang for their advertising buck. By telling them how, Claritas had profits last year "in the fat seven fig-ures," Robbin says, "We'll double that this year."

Last year, the publishers of the Adam & Eve erotic novelties catalogue came to Claritas and handed over the ZIP codes of all their customers. They wanted to know to what kind of people they were selling their funny underwear and sex toys. "We tried to guess what we'd get out of the computer," says Robbin. "We had a lot of surprised people. I figured it would be Cluster 37, which is Bohemian Mix. You know what it was? Cluster 8!"

Which is to say the type of neighborhood Robbin calls Money and Brains; for example, the neighborhood right across the Potomac from his high-rise office: Georgetown. "With a Cluster 8 there's usually a college or university in there somewhere, and more than 20 percent of the households have incomes over $50,000 a year. Claritas sales literature states: "These neighborhoods are typified by swank, shipshape town houses (some being private homes; some broken up into expensive flats) interspersed with mid-rise apartments on tree-lined streets. Cluster 8s are heavy consumers of adult luxuries — apparel, restan-rants, travel and the like." Georgetown, Money and Brains, Cluster 8.

"Everybody used to say that you couldn't do effective geodemographic research on Americans because they moved so much. What we've proved is that they tend to find the same neighborhood wherever they go," Robbin says.

. Food Figures

He likes to say you can move from Fair-field, Conn., to Stanford, Calif., and the only thing that changes is the palm trees. Not the people, the cars in the driveways, the liquor in the cabinet, the magazines on the coffee table. Birds of a feather become Claritas' sitting ducks, to use its phrase, > Shotguns and Pickups, as you might expect from the name, "leads the nation in owner-ship of mobile homes and shows peak indices for large families with school-age children, headed by blue-collar craftsmen and operatives with high school educations," according to Claritas literature.

"Cooking for pleasure," Robbin says, with laugh. "In Money and Brains they cook for pleasure at a rate of 116 percent of national average, but in Cluster 19, Shotguns and Pickups, they're at only 86 percent. There's an interesting correlation here between the cooking-for-pleasure figures and use of digestive remedies. Shotguns and Pickups uses a lot of them, and Money and Brains not so much. That's misleading, though, because the Shotguns and Pickups folks come from a tradition of greater reliance on home medicine. In Georgetown, everybody goes to the

Any student of American lifestyles might come up with a lot of the same predictions. But Claritas, with 53 full-time employees. dozens of computers and investment backing by Warner Communications, is doing it sys-

"It was a monstrous effort," he says. "Doing the census figures alone cost half a million dollars. Then there was a tremendous amount of data crunching after that."

It started in 1971, when Robbin and Claritas took copies of the computer tapes of the U.S. Census and broke them down into more than a thousand bits of information about all of us, not by the conventional counties, but by ZIP codes. The United States is divided into about 36,000 ZIP code areas, each averaging 2,250 households and 6,300 people.

Then they took that information and correlated it with 535 variables involving measures of education, wealth, size and age of family, mobility, ethnicity, type of housing and urban-

. What gets esoteric is the correlations. Robbin can order up a chart correlating, say, the popularity of the late news on television almost anything he's got figures on from mar-keting research organizations. Late-news viewers, Claritas reports, are high on roll-on deodorants and dry soup mixes, but low on medium-size dogs and target shooting. Chainsaw owners read a lot of copies of Outdoor Life and watch the "Wonderful World of Dis-They do not read The New York Times and they do not watch "Saturday Night

We're doing political applications with two companies, one Democratic, one Republican," Robbin says.

Robbin plans to expand the system once he can run the 1980 census tapes through his computers, thereby stratifying, dividing and segmenting America even further. A new class system! Is this a threat to the melting pot, and one nation indivisible, and the class-free society? If this system gets to be generally known, won't people resent being stereo-

PEOPLE Sale of Turners Barred

York was barred from selling two valuable paintings by the 19th-century British artist J.M.W. Turner after the seller's sister challenged his anthority to dispose of them.

State Supreme Court Justice Donald Sullivan extended a temporary restraining order granted to Nancy Oakes Huene. The order blocked the auction gallery from selling the paintings, valued at $1 million to $2 million apiece, as scheduled Wednesday night. Mrs. Huene, a resident of the Bahamas, sued Christie's, her brother Harry P. Oakes and their family corpora-tion, challenging Oakes' right to sell the 1846 paintings "Going to the Ball" and "Returning from the Ball." Papers filed in the case contend the paintings are owned by Oakpict Inc., a family corporation set up to hold and liquidate paintings owned by Oakes' and Mrs. Huene's father, Sir Harry Oakes, who was murdered in the Bahamas in 1943. Mrs. Huene, a shareholder in the corporation along with Oakes and a sister incapacitated due to a car accident, contended in court papers that Oakes planned to sell the Turners "without having asked or received my consent."
She challenged Oakes' authority to speak for their sister, Shirley Oakes Butler, who, according to court papers, is comatose in a Florida hospital. Oakes, also a resident of the Bahamas, said in an affidavit that the Bahamian court had appointed him as Mrs. Butler's receiver following her accident. Sullivan scheduled a hearing May 24.

Eldridge Cleaver, a former Black Panther turned American patriot, drew jeers from a student audience and tangled with a heckler during a speech at the University of Cali-fornia's Berkeley campus. Unlike his militant speeches of the 1960s. Cleaver's talk praised the United States and denouced Communism His appearance was sponsored by the Collegiate Association for the Research of Principles, an anti-Communist group affiliated with the Rev. Sun Myung Moon's Uni-fication Church. One protester tossed a pair of shoes painted red, white and blue at Cleaver and shouted, 'Malcohn X is much more alive than this stinking corpse is." The unidentified man then leaped to the stage, knocked Cleaver's glasses off and pulled over the microphone before Cleaver landed a left jab and several Moonies hustled the heckler offstage. Despite continuous shouts of "traitor" and "bootlicker" from other hecklers, Cleaver described how his revolutionary views col-lapsed while he toured Cuba, the Soviet Union and other Communist countries after fleeing the United States to avoid prosecution for a shootout with Oakland police in 1968. He said he came to believe Communism represented a greater threat to freedom than the oppression he found in the United States. Cleaver, author of "Soul on Ice," returned to the United States in 1975, and charges against him were dropped in 1980. Since then, he has been a regular on lecture circuits, professing his new-found Christianity, supporting President Reagan and knocking the radical left. In Sydney, Australia,
the Rev. Jerry Falwell, leader of America's "Moral Majority," was heckled by a rights group calling itself the "New South Wales Moral Majority." The crowd chanted "Who's the Moral Majority? It's gays, women and blacks," to which Falwell responded. "There are kooks in every town. It doesn't matter whether you are in Austra-lia, New York or Lynchburg [Va.]." Falwell is in Sydney for a Christian rally and a series of seminars on religious education.
